CINEMATOGRAPHY.

Edited by Earl S. Pierce

TIME CONSIDERATION

The speed of objects in motion is subject to variation. Light travels at 186,000 miles per second and the speed of rivers is measured in inches per second. The senses with which we are endowed will not permit us to perceive motion except very fast. A movement of objects which is not perceptible except by the aid of observation, try to see the motion in the minute hand moving around the face of an alarm clock. In comparison with the minute hand, the growth of fruit and the growth of a plant are very slow. The growth of a plant is so slow that it is not perceptible to the eye. The growth of a plant is so slow that it is not perceptible to the eye. The growth of a plant is so slow that it is not perceptible to the eye.

Now let us see how this growth is measured. The standard of time is set for approximately 24 hours. The growth of a plant is so slow that it is not perceptible to the eye. The growth of a plant is so slow that it is not perceptible to the eye. The growth of a plant is so slow that it is not perceptible to the eye. The growth of a plant is so slow that it is not perceptible to the eye. The growth of a plant is so slow that it is not perceptible to the eye.

RADIO REFORM REQUIRED
Joe Elmer Morgan, well known educator, author of many works on education, contributing editor of the Child Welfare magazine, and since 1920, editor of the Journal of the National Education Association, declares that radio has "sunk to the lowest level of its development in the United States". He attributes this decline to the advertising which is now being put on the air. Because of it, he says, many people are refraining from listening to radio sets.
Mr. Morgan, as chairman of the National Committee on Education by Radio, in addition to his other qualifications, is "entirely entitled to speak with authority." He says he will find a responsive chord in the heart of most radio listeners. The consistent interweaving of musical programs with irrelevant advertising announcements is not to lead to one of three results. Either the listener turns the dial to some other station or turns it off entirely, or ceases to be a steady radio fan.
"Commercialism is likely to prove the undoing of the radio as of so much else in America in recent years. Can one imagine a recital by Kreisler or by a symphony orchestra interspersed with commercial announcements for some particular brand of cigarettes or tooth paste? It would mean empty halls for even the best musical performances.
"For a time radio advertising, because of its novelty, 'pulled'. Now, as Mr. Morgan rightly says, 'It is evident that the public is disgusted with advertising on the air.'"

THE GREAT ANDROMEDA NEBULA

A TALK WITH THE

CINEMATOGRAPHY.

TIME CONSIDERATION

Just a little over 300 years ago, a short time in history, the Universe was limited by the visibility of the naked eye. Only about 3,000 stars could be seen above the horizon, and no stars fainter than the 6th magnitude.
Now the Universe is understood to be composed of hundreds of thousands of nebulae, star clusters and star clouds, in spaces measured by millions of light years.
There is a growing inclination among astronomers, to consider separate systems of nebulae, as perverted titles of "island universes". The galaxy of Milky-Way is an example of continental dimensions, of the meaning of the term "island-universe", it is by far the largest independent system of "island universe" known.
Then comes our nearest neighbors, the Magellanic Clouds, the Large and Small, which lay in the South at distances of 100 and 110 light years, respectively.
The third in kinship is an object discovered about 1895 by Baerwald, a star cloud, that is numbered 6822 in the New General Catalogue (N. G. C.). Modern telescopes have shown this cloud-like nebula to be stellar in structure at a measured distance of 700,000 light years (light year equals a little less than 6 trillion miles), with a diameter of 3,000 light years. About the fourth in size, it is interestingly distant, is about the same, or possibly less, is the Great Nebula in Andromeda, a spiral, one of which only a very few can be seen with the unaided eye, and this very faintly, at a distance from the sun of 930,000 light years, about 28,400 parsecs.

The spiral is 45,000 light years in diameter. Since 1909, reliable knowledge of the distance and dimension of the nebula has been determined. The Andromeda spiral is numbered 284, N. G. C. (and in the earlier list of Messier's catalogue of 103) as number 31.
Compared with the Galaxy, its diameter is about one-fifth. It is stated that the number of novae (new stars) in Andromeda nebula has reached a total number of 55, and the outer parts of the nebula usually photographed as nebulae on plates taken with the 100 inch reflector. Our sun, removed to the distance of the spiral would be of the 27th magnitude, over a hundred times fainter than the faintest star that could be distinguished with our most powerful telescopes.
In 1885 a new star (nova) showed brightly not far from the center of the Andromeda nebula. This spiral nebula is said to be radiating as much mass in two weeks as our earth weighs. Estimates of the weight of the spiral is that it must be 5500 millions of times that of the sun.
The luminosity of Andromeda is equal to 660 millions of suns. The nebula is nearly in the center of the constellation of Andromeda. It is about 49 degrees from the pole star and nearly overhead in early evening in the later part of November. It has a measurement of a few minutes of arc.
The nebula contains many variable stars. Examples of other nebulae which are photographed edgewise in line of sight, show them to be thin, similar to Saturn's rings, only spiral, and the nebula is probably something of this character. By terrestrial methods of measurement, outer portions of the nebula is moving at a speed of 100 miles per second. So huge is its size, that 19 millions of years of time would be required to complete a full revolution of the spiral.
Two other small dense nebulae accompany it and they seem to belong to the same system. Unlike most spiral nebulae, it is approaching at a velocity of 300 kilometers per second. Its center is concentrated light discloses no stars and its form because of its tilting position, is shaped as elongated or elliptical. Its structure is likened to a great white pool in a dark circle, contrasted with bright center and circles or lanes of dark occult material.

KEZAR FALLS

October Weddings

Eleanor R. Spyrer of Cornish and Alan F. Garner of Kezar Falls were united in wedlock on the afternoon of October 3rd, in the Congregational Church at Cornish, the ceremony was performed by Rev. G. H. Hughes, and Rev. Joseph Clark of the Cornish church. The sacred edifice was decorated for the occasion and the two ministers took proud possession of the wedding party which greeted their faces with smiles. Dr. LeRoy S. Spyrer owned the prize which he very generously presented to another and the rest of the party fulfilled their obligations to the best of their abilities. During the reception, an automobile was seen traveling the road in some haste and it was some time before it was understood that it was the newlyweds making their getaway. The little car has taken them to their new home in Kezar Falls, Maine, New Hampshire. The bride was a Miss M. A. Jones of Kezar Falls, and the groom was a Mr. A. F. Garner of Kezar Falls.
